

Strict Quarantine is Now Being Enforced

Situation Much improved. No New Cases of Small Pox Reported in or Near Fort Towson.

Fort Towson Enterprise – February 7, 1913 – transcribed by Ron Henson

Law abiding citizens – people who have the interest of the town and county, even their own families at heart, cannot blame the officers for the rigid quarantine now being enforced.

There is but one way to stamp out this dreaded small pox, and that is to all work together and put it down. To be quarantined or held in a detention camp is terrible, but this only lasts a few days and is much better than to expose your family and friends, causing them to suffer untold agonies and perhaps death.

The person who wants to do the right thing we believe would have no objection to being quarantined or detained. We are all human – life is just as sweet to one as another, so let's all put our shoulder to the wheel and push together, we can conquer if we will.

All of those thought to have been exposed last week and quarantined were turned loose after being vaccinated.

Up to this morning no new cases of small pox in or near Fort Towson have been reported, which makes our people feel that the greatest danger has passed. The only thing to do now is to continue holding our own or doing a little better.
