

WILL ROSS DIED SUNDAY MORNING

VICTIM OF UNERRING AIM OF REECE GILMORE SUCCUMBED TO WOUNDS
AT ONE O'CLOCK

Gilmore Placed Under Bond of Two Thousand Dollars. Preliminary Examination Friday.

The Hugo Daily Husonian June 21, 1915 - transcribed by Ron Henson

Will Ross, who was shot early Saturday morning near Hales store at the forks of Bobby [probably should be "Boggy" - transcriber's note] by Reece Gilmore, died Sunday morning at one o'clock in Boswell. His body was taken to Paris Sunday afternoon and buried there the same day.

Gilmore was placed under a bond of two thousand dollars Sunday by County Attorney Warren who went to Boswell and made an investigation of the trouble. The bond was easily made, a number of people of worth and substance in Boswell volunteering to subscribe their names to the document.

His preliminary examination was set for Friday next in Boswell. It is the general opinion of the community in which the shooting occurred that Gilmore shot only in self defense when he placed with unerring accuracy three bullets in the stomach of Goss. Last winter the fracas between the two, which was mentioned in the account of the shooting Sunday's Husonian, was forced by Ross. Gilmore, it is said calmly removed his over coat and gave a sound thrashing to his assailant at that time. Gilmore has a good reputation and standing in the Boswell country and among the merchants there.
